Bowser Companies: 4.3%

The Nasdaq managed to bounce back slightly despite weakness from other major indices. Technology and utilities were the only bullish sectors this week, with the energy sector dropping 7.6%. Volatility ramped up multiple times, but the end of week rally knocked it back down. Although it did not effect equities, gold had its first sizable pullback since early August.

Bowser stocks (down 4.3% for the week) dropped as small stocks underperformed as a whole. Franklin Wireless (FKWL) still pushed higher and hit a new all-time high of $17. There was no specific headline driving the stock, but it has been in a bullish trend for seven months straight. Overall, it was a quiet week for recommendations due to the lack of headlines.

Company Headlines

Bowser Notes

Franklin Wireless (FKWL) continued to steal the spotlight and hit a new all-time high. The stock ran up ahead of the earnings announcement, which was followed by three more weeks of bullish price action. The most unbelievable part of the run up is that the stock is moving on barely any volume. It is averaging just 48,000 shares per week and a weekly range of $2.

Although there were not many headlines this week, the trend of insider buying pressure continued. Insiders have been consistently accumulating shares for the past few months. While it is ideal to see this pattern for specific stocks, this is a big deal considering insider transactions are down significantly for the NYSE. Keep a close eye on insider activity moving forward to spot any potential patterns.
