Stocks took a beating as major indices record their third straight week of sell pressure. Fear of upcoming rate hikes in 2022 have caused volatility to spike and growth stocks to drop. Netflix (NFLX) dragged down technology stocks following awful earnings guidance. Commodities continued to boom despite the slight bounce from the U.S. Dollar.

Bowser stocks (down 6.1% for the week) managed to outperform small stocks but still dropped. Although a number of recommendations released positive news, the stock market drop dragged them lower. This weakness from small stocks marks a new 52-week low for the Russell 2000 Index.

Bowser Notes

Major indices had their worst week since the COVID-19 crash in March 2020. The anticipated changes in monetary policy are being blamed for the selloff, but the lackluster macroeconomic data is likely playing a role. There will be a Federal Reserve interest rate decision announcement on Wednesday afternoon and rates are expected to remain unchanged.

Small stocks tend to underperform during times of increased market volatility. This creates a number of buying opportunities as many of our favorite recommendations slide back under $3. We encourage subscribers to make a list of stocks to buy and consider buying them at a reasonable price. Be sure to keep it simple and stick to the Game Plan!
