Bowser Companies: 3.7%

Equities rallied and volatility dropped following strong quarterly results. The lack of macroeconomic data allowed for stocks to hold gains following their earnings announcements. The Federal Reserve blackout period will begin next week and extends through November 3, 2022. Energy and technology stocks led the way and showed relative strength.

Bowser stocks (up 3.7% for the week) gained and numerous recommendations bounced off of their 52-week lows. Clean Energy Fuels (CLNE) was the top gainer following industry news that BP PLC (BP) acquired renewable gas industry leader Archea Energy for $4.1 billion. Other energy recommendations lagged despite strength from the sector as a whole.

Company Headlines

- Monday: Fluent (FLNT) announced its comprehensive set of audience segments will be available via TransUnion's TruAudience® Data Marketplace.
- Tuesday: No significant headlines.
- Wednesday: No significant headlines.
- Thursday: No significant headlines.
- Friday: Siebert Financial (SIEB) announced that its headquarters is moving from New York's Fifth Avenue to Miami, Florida.

Bowser Notes

Both volatility and volume dropped ahead of the Federal Reserve blackout period. Federal Reserve members will not be speaking or providing forecasts over the next two weeks, which puts a large emphasis on earnings. The next week features earnings reports from a large portion of the S&P 500, including twelve mega cap stocks. However, most Bowser stocks will be reporting earnings within the first two weeks of November.

Clean Energy Fuels (CLNE) shares soared this week following news that BP PLC (BP) acquired renewable gas industry leader Archea Energy for $4.1 billion. Renewable gas stocks outperformed as a whole and analysts upgraded multiple stocks within the industry. CLNE shares are up 42% from their 3-month low of $4.64 per share.
